The NHS has improved significantly
over the past fifteen years.

Many more advanced high-cost treatments are available, which are supporting patients to live longer and dramatically improving their quality of life.

While this is good news, set alongside an increasing demand for health services it means that we must make some tough decisions about priorities.

In Kirklees, we are committed to delivering safe, high quality health services that meet the needs of our local population. We also have to keep within our budget and ensure that NHS money is invested in a way that benefits the health of the whole population and represents good value for money.

To help us develop our plans, we have launched "Talk health Kirklees", through which we want to have an open and honest discussion with local people about the things we could do to get better value from NHS spending.
